

HELP

The sun gazed down; drying up the dam leaves of the forest; deep into the centre of Lithumania. The rays shone into Josh's pale eyes as he slowly climbed down the mossy ladder. The light was reflecting brightly on the shiny glass window. The fog was just beginning to roll in. Josh got taken aback by the beautiful forest and started gazing into the distance. The dew started to dry down onto the damp soil. BANG! Josh hit the ground; wheezing for air; the tree had winded him so much, the axe had only just fell beside him; he slowly picked himself up and let out a little sob, he loped over to the first tree. He swung the axe hard; cutting off part of the thick tree. He half-heartedly swung the axe into it again. As it swayed into the tree; Josh suddenly collapsed over a small root of the tree. His face hit the cold wet ground as the dirt eroded around him he suddenly felt himself falling into a deep, deep hole falling and falling he just couldn't stop.

As he hit the ground a small light suddenly surrounded him; lighting up a small room. He slowly got up and started to take in his surroundings. "Where am I," he slowly muttered to himself he slowly paced along the dirty wooden floor. Then everything went dark. "Help me!" Josh screeched at the top of his voice; silence was the only answer. Then as if nothing had happened, the light came back; revealing a small hole in the wall. He cautiously looked in and saw a path that lead upward and he began the upward hike. Then halfway up a dog or some kind of huge animal started chasing him up.

15 minutes later he finally came to the top exhausted with all the walking and trying not to step on the blisters on his foot; he quickly climbed up the tree, and into his bedroom. Then he suddenly felt hungry and went into his luxury spa and ate a large pizza then as he was thinking about his day he said. "Hmph"
