

To the Honourable Niall Blair,

Quickly, I pick up a packet of maltesers. Suddenly I pause and look at the back. "Whatever. Just vegetable oil."

Palm oil is a cause of orangatans dying. We cut down palm trees that our beautiful orangatans are living in then magically palm oil is changed into vegetable oil. How would you feel if your precious home you're living in today disappeared? I'll let you think on that. But come on, it's just two simple words to let us know you've killed thousands of orangatans.

Now let's go onto orangatans. Do you know how many there are left in the world? A century ago there were probably more than 230,000 orangatans in total, but now it's estimated at about 104,700 based on updated geographic range and the Sumatran tiger is about 7,500, which by the way means they're critically endangered.

Hundreds of infant orangatans are taken from the wild for the pet trade every year. This is done by killing the mother and taking the baby. It is guessed that four to five orangatans die for every baby reaching the market.

It's just two words: Palm (and) oil. Yes, it's just two words to change people's minds, and STOP you killing our beautiful innocent orangatans.

So, I hope this convinced you because if it didn't I just can't imagine a world with no orangatans left in it.

Yours sincerely,

Zali
